

Contents

Acknowledgments

1. Introduction

- 1.1 Introduction
- 1.2 Human rights in everyday practice
 - 1.2.1 Human rights as international global discourse
 - 1.2.2 Human rights as vernacular
 - 1.2.3 Human rights as prescription
 - 1.2.3.1 Human rights as legal language and practice
 - 1.2.3.2 The modern individual
 - 1.2.3.3 Juridical capital
- 1.3 "Policing by consensus"
 - 1.3.1 A policy consensus
 - 1.3.2 The "lack of legitimacy"
 - 1.3.3 Accountability
 - 1.3.4 Assumption of congruence
 - 1.3.5 Accountability deferred
- 1.4 Methodology
 - 1.4.1 Matching the theoretical double bind
 - 1.4.1.1 Participant observation
 - 1.4.1.2 Discourse analysis
 - 1.4.2 Interpretative process and fieldnotes
- 1.5 Practical realization
- 1.6 Detectives
- 1.7 The research location
 - 1.7.1 The stations
 - 1.7.2 The areas – studying the margins
- 1.8 Limits and possibilities of the studying the police
- 1.9 Order of chapters

2. Remembering the police

- 2.1 Introduction: At the police memorial
- 2.2 Partisan policing
 - 2.2.1 The beginnings
 - 2.2.2 Racial policing: consolidating the origins
 - 2.2.3 Lines of partisanship: Boer or Brit; capital or (white) labour
 - 2.2.4 Apartheid policing: dim beginnings – forceful manifestation
 - 2.2.5 Escalation of security issues – military policing
 - 2.2.6 The memorial at its inauguration – the double strategy inscribed
 - 2.2.7 Continued meaning of the memorial

- 2.3 Racial narrative
 - 2.3.1 Hidden Traces
 - 2.3.2 Segregation and apartheid within the police
 - 2.3.3 Betrayal, survival, aspiration – recruitment of black police officers
 - 2.3.4 The need for black recruits
 - 2.3.5 Apartheid policing – separate policing
- 2.4 The self-referential discourse of the police
 - 2.4.1 Continuous modernisation
 - 2.4.2 The rule of law
 - 2.4.3 On their own initiative
 - 2.4.4 Unanimity between black and white police officers
 - 2.4.5 Not responsible
- 2.5 Making the cut or just another myth – the human rights' version of events
- 2.6 Conclusion
- 2.7 Moving on: between the grand narratives is the everyday

3. Human rights training

- 3.1 Introduction: The training gets cancelled
- 3.2 Part One: The Human Rights and Policing Training Programme
 - 3.2.1 Setting the scene
 - 3.2.2 “The Making of...”
 - 3.2.3 The human rights industry
 - 3.2.4 The culture of legal positivism and the social life of international human rights standards
 - 3.2.5 Residues of international human rights parochialism
 - 3.2.5.1 The primacy of international standards
 - 3.2.5.2 In pursuit of moral neutrality: don't alienate the trainee
 - 3.2.5.3 Dispassionate police practice
 - 3.2.5.4 Empty human dignity
 - 3.2.5.5 Turning violence into force
 - 3.2.5.6 Professionalising investigation
 - 3.2.5.7 Implementation through self discipline
 - 3.2.5.8 Utilitarian equality
 - 3.2.5.9 Vulnerable actors
 - 3.2.6 Concluding Comments part one
- 3.3 Part Two: The Human Rights and Policing Programme on management level
 - 3.3.1 Evaluation
 - 3.3.2 Reduced but ceremonial status
 - 3.3.3 Public relations feature
 - 3.3.4 Taking off into the international realm: the broadening of a self-referential consensus
 - 3.3.5 “The clash of cultures” or “Who is the odd one out?”
- 3.4 Part Three: Training level
 - 3.4.1 Introduction
 - 3.4.2 Selection and training of trainers

3.4.3 The training: and exercise in translation

3.4.3.1 Levels of translation

3.4.3.2 To know or not to know

3.4.3.3 Towards professional knowledge

3.4.3.4 Exclusivity of meaning: human rights and race

3.4.3.5 Creating a new (moral) language

3.5. Conclusion

4. "Don't push this Constitution down my throat ...!" The Use of Violence in Everyday Policing

4.1 Introduction: To use or not to use violence

4.2 The prevalence of violence

4.3 Nostalgia

4.4 Backstage - front stage: The meaning of violence

4.4.1 Nightly performance: out for arrest – scene one

4.4.2 Nightly Performance: out for arrest – scene two

4.4.3 Acting without a warrant and other administrative short-cuts

4.4.4 Docket culture

4.4.5 Protection of time out

4.5 The comfort zone

4.6 The "Wiseman"

4.7 Different lives – different actors

4.7.1 Introduction to different lives

4.7.2 Inspector de Villiers

4.7.3 Sergeant Khoza

4.7.4 Inspector Chetty

4.7.5 Sergeant Legodi

4.7.6 Inspector Kekana

4.8 Conclusion

5. My police – your police. The informal privatisation

5.1 Introduction: Down Bree Street with the police

5.2 Inner city imaginary

5.3 Johannesburg's inner city: place of dreams and dangers

5.4 Whose space is it? Housing in the inner city

5.5 Redirecting state power

5.6 Inner city police intervention

5.7 Disjunction and concurrence: making sense of the incoherence of the police intervention

5.7.1 Distortion or interpretation

5.7.2 Sergeant Kloppers' sense of mission

5.7.3 Non-intervention as intervention

5.7.4 Corrupt relationships

5.8 Conclusion

6. "Ons gaan ry". On sociability and entanglement in the city

- 6.1 Introduction: Up and down in town
- 6.2 Porous boundaries – the public and the private
 - 6.2.1 The real meaning of cars
 - 6.2.2 Nurturing the contacts
 - 6.2.3 Working with informers
- 6.3 Enacting human rights
 - 6.3.1 Getting absorbed into the world of Bangladeshi immigrants
 - 6.3.2 In the margins
 - 6.3.3 Pursuing sociability
 - 6.3.4 The meaning of cell phone numbers
 - 6.3.5 Enacting human rights
- 6.4 Generalising the case
- 6.5 Conclusion

7. Ma-slaan-pa dockets

- 7.1 Introduction: “Defeating the ends of justice”
- 7.2 Making sense of the withdrawal of cases
- 7.3 Gender issues as (human) right issues
- 7.4 From welfare to rights – shifting intervention in the private sphere
- 7.5 The powers of the domestic violence policy “estranged”
- 7.6 Retaliate, resist, abide – new police practice
 - 7.6.1 Looking from the other side of the encounter
 - 7.6.2 Strong women – weak men
 - 7.6.3 Domestic mess
 - 7.6.4 Administrative onslaught
- 7.7 Conclusion

8. Conclusion

- 8.1 Summary
- 8.2 Incision versus continuity
- 8.3 The culture of human rights
- 8.4 The uneven effect of human rights
- 8.5 Drawing the line: Backstage – front stage
- 8.6 Vernacular articulations
- 8.7 Local justice

Bibliography

Summary

Samenvatting