Contents

List of Boxes 8
List of Figures 8
List of Tables 9
Preface 11
Glossary 15

Introduction 19
(i) Background to the study 19
(ii) Why Mexico? 22
(iii) Why La Laguna? 23
(iv) Research goal and research questions 23
(v) Terminology/definition of the main concepts 24
(vi) Research methodology 24
(vii) Outline of the study 25

1 The global garment industry: organizational and geographic features and trends 29
  1.1 Characterising the industry 30
  1.1.1 Organizational cornerstones of garment production 34
  1.1.2 Changes in the garment market 37
  1.1.3 Changing to face new challenges 42
  1.2 Garments: straddling the globe 44
  1.2.1 Regulating apparel 50
  1.2.2 Production networks and strategic localisation 51
  1.3 Summary 55

2 A framework for analysis 61
  2.1 A new approach: focusing on firms and networks 61
  2.2 A network view of global divisions of labour: the value chain 65
  2.2.1 Governance in GVCs 67
  2.2.2 Governance in global garment value chains 68
  2.2.3 The GVC and upgrading in LMICs 70
  2.3 Clusters 72
  2.3.1 The fuzzy notion of embeddedness 75
  2.3.2 Clusters, path dependence and lock-in 76
  2.3.3 Clusters, learning and upgrading 77
  2.4 Conclusion 78
7 La Laguna and the ‘outside world’: bi-national export production networks and the domestic market alternative

7.1 General trends with regard to La Laguna’s buyers
7.2 Buyers: sourcing and networking strategies
7.2.1 Branded manufacturers
7.2.2 Retailers
7.2.3 Marketers/designers
7.3 Buyers and producers: contrasting perceptions
7.4 Export networks and the insertion of SMEs
7.5 Domestic market networks: an alternative for SMEs?
7.6 Conclusion

Appendix II: Illustrations of bi-national production networks

8 The dynamics of the Laguna garment cluster
8.1 Dynamics and strategies
8.2 Making better things
8.3 Making things better
8.4 Towards full-package production: local-level obstacles and success
8.5 Labour strategies
8.5.1 Labour strategies in the urban core
8.5.2 The involvement of the rural labour force
8.6 Geographical shifts in garment production
8.7 The bi-national value chain and La Laguna’s position therein
8.8 Summary and conclusions

Appendix III: Positioning garment companies in relation to their competitive environment
Appendix IV: Evidence of a crisis in La Laguna

9 Summary and interpretations
9.1 Summary of main findings
9.2 La Laguna: a unique case?
9.3 Interpreting the findings

References
Annex 1: Research methodology
Annex 2: Corporate Code of Conduct of a garment marketer
Samenvatting (Summary in Dutch)
Curriculum vitae